During your involvement in the Project, you may create literary works and other copyright works, give performances and/or feature in films, recordings and/or photographs (such contribution(s) and/or any part(s) of them being referred to below as your contribution). You will own all copyright and other rights in your contribution. First Story would, however, like to use your contribution for the Project and in the future.

 - a. you grant to First Story a non-exclusive, worldwide, perpetual, sub-licensable and royalty-free licence of all your right, title and interest in and to your contribution;
 - b. you grant to First Story every consent required under the present and future laws of every jurisdiction that may be required for the fullest use your contribution; and
 - c. you waive, and agree not to assert, any moral rights or other non-transferable rights that you may have in relation to your contribution, although First Story shall (where applicable and to the extent reasonably practicable) endeavour to accord you a suitable acknowledgement as author of any written literary work contributed by you to the Project.
- 3 First Story has created a private online social network via www.ning.com to facilitate communications between the author and all participating students (Network). The Network is moderated at regular intervals by First Story staff. You agree to comply, at all times when using the Network, with First Story's terms of use for the Network, which are available online at www.firststory.co.uk (or in hard or soft copy from First Story on written request).
- 4 First Story may store your details on First Story's database for all purposes relating to the running of the Project and operation of the Network and may from time to time use personal data relating to you (in an anonymised form) to evaluate the Project's effectiveness and to publish the results of such evaluation.
